ON PRESENTIMENTS.

We are indebted (says the National Intelligencer) for the following article to the Monthly Magazine and American Review, published at New-York, a very interesting miscellaneous work, and to which we wish as much circulation as the industry and enterprize of its editors deserve. It is among the proofs of the diffusion of belles-lettres knowledge, and of the growing taste for scientific and literary information, that such works increase in number, and now appear to receive a sufficient support to keep them alive. A year or two ago, we had in this country but one or two of the periodical publications generally called Magazines; there are now at least a dozen well conducted monthly and quarterly repositories of original miscellany and foreign selections.

Few among the many stories of presentiment of death have had more currency or struck deeper into the "soft credulity" of men, than that of Lord Lyttleton. We are glad to see an effort to place it on its just foundation. The belief in such presentiments is, in our view, as irreconcileable with the principles of religion as with those of science and natural law. As it is extensively injurious to society, and frequently the cause of suicide, its fallacy deserves to be exposed.

FROM THE AMERICAN MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

Messrs. Editors—There was nothing more extraordinary in the eccentric life of Thomas Lord Lyttleton, or, as he is commonly called Lord Lyttleton the younger, than the mysterious manner of his death. The event made a great noise, and excited much speculation at the time. Indeed the bruit has hardly subsided, and inquiry is scarcely at rest. If you think there are any of your readers who are not familiar with the facts, you will perhaps feel willing to admit a succinct account of his [illegible] character, and of the singular concomitants of his decease, into your useful miscellany.

This licentious nobleman was the son of the celebrated George, Lord Lyttleton, who was equally celebrated as a scholar and a christian. He was the heir of his father's talents, but not of his virtues. He succeeded to the title and estates in 1773. The circumstances of his death; which occurred in 1779, were certainly very extraordinary, and excited the more attention on account of his Lordship's known profligacy and scepticism. In the Gentleman's Magazine for November last, I met with the following article in relation to this event:

'Pitt-Place, Epsom, June 6.

"MR. URBAN—Your correspondent T. S. mentions "the marvellous account of Lord Lyttleton's death," and wishes to see it "authenticated." Having bought Pitt-place, where he died, I can give the following copy of a document in writing left in the house as a heir-loom, which may be depended on. Having received much pleasure and instruction from your work for near forty years, I deem it my duty to assist, in however trifling a degree."

"Lord Lyttleton's dream and death" (see Amiral Wolsley's account.) "I was at Pitt-place, Epsom, when Lord Lyttleton died: Lord Fortescue, Lady Flood & the two Miss Amphletts, were also present. Lord Lyttleton had not been long returned from Ireland, and frequently had been seized with suffocating fits. "He was attacked several times by them in the course of the preceding month. While in his house in Hill-street, Berkley square, he dreamt, three days before his death, "he saw a bird fluttering, and afterwards a woman appeared in white apparel, and said, 'Prepare to die, you will not exist three days.' He was alarmed, and called his servant, who found him much agitated, and in a profuse perspiration. This had a visible effect next day on his spirits. On the third day while at breakfast with the above-mentioned persons, he said, 'I have jockied the ghost, as this is the third day.' The whole party set off to Pitt-place. They had not long arrived, when he was seized with a usual fit. Soon recovered. Dined at five. To bed at eleven. His servant about to give him rhubarb and mint water, stirred it with a tooth pick; which Lord Lyttleton perceiving, called him a 'slovenly dog,' and bid him bring a spoon. On the servant's return he was in a fit. The pillow being high, his chin bore hard on his neck. Instead of relieving him, he ran for help, and on his return found him dead."

'In Boswell's "Life of Dr. Johnson," (vol. iv. p. 313) he said, "It is the most extraordinary occurrence in my days. I heard it from Lord Westcote, his uncle—I am so glad to have evidence of the spiritual world, that I am willing to believe it."i Dr. Adams replied, "You have evidence enough; good evidence, which needs no support."

In the same Miscellany, for December, 1799, a very interesting and candid account is given of this strange occurrence, from which I make the following extract.

'On Thursday morning, the 25th of November last, his lordship mentioned at breakfast, to Mrs. Flood (a widow lady who lived with him as companion to Miss Amphletts, his neice,) that he had passed a very restless night; that he thought he heard a fluttering noise in the room; and that immediately after he fancied he saw a beautiful lady, dressed in white, with a bird on her hand, who desired he would settle his affairs, for that he had but a short time to live. On his inquiring how long, the vision answered, "Not three days." His lordship mentioned this dream frequently, but with an affected air of careless indifference, which only showed that it had made a stronger impression on his mind, than he chose to acknowledge. On Saturday evening he pulled out his watch, observed that it was half past ten, and that he still had an hour and a half longer to live, and jocosely chucking under the chin one of the young ladies (his neices) danced about the room, and asked her if she did not think he would get over it, and live beyond the time predicted for his death.—Soon afterwards he went to bed, complaining of an uneasiness in his stomach, and while his servant was mixing a cup of rhubarb and pepper-mint water, a medicine which he frequently took, expired. It was remarkable, likewise, that his lordship endeavoured to account for his having dreamed of the bird, by saying that a few days before, being in his green-house, at Pitt-place, with Mrs. D— he had taken some pains to catch a robin, which had been shut up in it, and which he had set at liberty.

'His general complaint was a pain in the stomach, and his usual medicine, a dose of rhubarb in mint-water. His real disorder was a polypus on the heart, described to be a quantity of coagulated blood, contained in a cyst or bag, on the bursting of which, immediate death, the natural consequence, ensued.'

His lordship died at the age of thirty-five.

There was certainly in the above case a striking coincidence of the event with the prediction. But that such presentiments are not infallible I imagine many of your readers can attest. An anecdote I lately met with in some biographical sketches, by the late John Courteney, Esq. of the principal men of his day will go to show this. Mr. Courteney thus relates it:

'My acquaintance with the late Gen. Dalrymple, uncle to the present Earl of Stair, commenced about the year 1763. His manner and address was pompous, and he did not express himself with facility and conciseness, which induced many to depreciate his parts. His understanding was excellent, clear and comprehensive, wholly employed on military subjects; his judgement and precision on every point of his profession was unquestionable.

'I lived in great intimacy with General Dalrymple above forty years, and always found him a generous and attached friend. His table was elegant, and his great delight was to entertain a convivial and select party; for he hated to have a crowded dinner, which obliges the company to split into sets, and substitutes a confused noise instead of general agreeable conversation.

'The last time he sailed to America, he earnestly pressed me to go and dine with him at Hounslow on his way to Portsmouth. I observed that he was unusually grave and dispirited; after a cheerful bottle he began to talk of presentiments, and at last owned that he had conceived an idea that he should die in America, and never see England again. I was surprised at this, as he was of a firm, high, cheerful temper, and as little tinctured by superstition as any man I ever knew. To dissipate his mental gloom, I related an anecdote which happened to myself not many months before. I dreamed that Moses appeared and acquainted me that on such a day of the month and day of the week I should surely die. I told this dream the next day at dinner at Mr. Blair's in Portland place; but it made so little impression on me that I had forgot both the dream and the Mosaic dates. Mrs. Sharp, a Scotch lady, who was present, privately made a memorandum of the fact; and as I accidentally called at her mother's, Lady Sharp, in Tichfield street, she reminded me that the fatal day was come to verify Moses' denunciation. The surprise and suddenness of recalling this singular dream to my recollection, in defiance of all my efforts, depressed my spirits so much, that I was obliged to step into Devaynes' shop in Spring Gardens, in my way to the ordnance office, and [illegible] forty or fifty drops of lavender drops to revive me; nor did I recover from the gloomy impression till the day was past.—I assured the general on my honor, that I had not invented the anecdote for the occasion. I appealed to Mr. and Mrs. Blair, and Mrs. Sharp for the truth and accuracy of my relation. The singularity of this dream, its accidental impression upon me, with the enlivening aid of another bottle, had a most propitious influence on the general. He pursued his journey to Portsmouth in the evening, and was no longer disturbed by his presentiment. I have often reflected since, that if my dream had been accidentally verified, it would have had more effect to prove the divine legation of Moses than Warburton's Treatises.

FRENCH HOSPITALS.

From a report made to the Governor General of Hospitals in Paris, on the state of those establishments, from 1803 to 1814, it appears that these hospitals are divided into classes, called Hospitaux and Hospices; the former ten in number, being for the sick; and the latter of which there are nine, affording provision for infants, and incurables, who are destitute. The Hôtel Dieu, the most ancient hospital, contains 1200 beds. In the Hospice de l'Accouchement, in 1814, were delivered 27,000 females, of whom 24,000 confessed they were unmarried. From 1804 to 1814, were admitted into the Hospice de l'Allaitrement, or Foundling Hospital 23,458 boys & 22,463 girls, total 45,921 children, of whom only 4130 were legitimate. During the ten years, 355,000 sick were admitted into the Hospitaux, and 59,000 poor persons into the Hospices. Of the maniacs there are more women than men.—Among the younger females, love has been the most common cause of insanity; and among the others jealousy, or domestic discord. Among the younger males, it is the too speedy development of their passions; and among the older, the derangement of their affairs, that has crazed them. The calamities of the Revolution have been another cause of madness, and it is observed that the men were mad with aristocracy and the women with democracy; excessive grief occasioning lunacy in the former, and ideas of independence and equality in the latter.

From Dr. Ewell's Medical Companion.

Hypochondriac Disease,

Commonly called Vapours or Low Spirits.

This complaint chiefly occurs in the males, and that at advanced life; and it is confined, for the most part, to persons of a sedentary or studious disposition; especially such as have indulged grief or anxiety.

Some Hypochondriacs have fancied themselves miserably afflicted in one way, and some in another—some have insisted that they were TEA POTS, and some that they were TOWN CLOCKS. This, that he had a big belly, and that, had glass legs—one, that he was extremely ill, and another, that he was actually dying. But I have never heard of any of this blue Devil class, whose extravagance ever yet came up to the following, which was related to me by my noble hearted old friend, the late Dr. Stevenson, of Baltimore, whose very name always sounds in my ears, as the summary of every manly virtue.

This Hypochondriac, who, by the by, was a patient of Dr. Stevenson, after ringing the change on every mad conceit that ever tormented a crazy brain, would have it at last that he was dead, actually dead. Dr. Stevenson having been sent for one morning in great haste, by the wife of his patient, hastened to his bed side, where he found him stretched out at full length, his hands across his breast, his great toes in contact, his eyes and mouth closely shut, and his looks cadaverous.

"Well, sir, how do you do? how do you do this morning," asked Dr. Stevenson in his blustering jovial way approaching his bed. "How do I do!" replied the Hypochondriac faintly—"a pretty question to ask a dead man." "Dead!" replied the doctor. "Yes' sir, quite dead. I died last night about twelve o'clock."

Quick as lightning, Dr. Stevenson caught his cue, which was to strike him on the string of his character, on which the Doctor happily recollected he was very tender. Having gently put his hand on the forehead of the Hypochondriac, as if to ascertain whether it was cold, and felt his pulse, he exclaimed in a doleful note, "Yes the poor man is dead enough, it is all over with him, and now the sooner he can be buried, the better." Then stepping up to his wife, and whispering her not to be frightened at the measures he was about to take, he called to the servant, "My boy your poor master is dead, and the sooner he can be put in the ground the better. Run to Mr. C—m, for I know he always keeps New-England Coffins by him ready made, and do you hear, bring a coffin of the largest size, for your master makes a stout corpse, and having died last night, and the weather warm, will soon begin to smell."

Away went the servant and soon returned with a proper coffin. The wife and family having got their lesson from the Doctor, and gathered around him and followed not a little, while they were putting the body in the coffin. Presently the pall bearers, who were quickly provided and let into the secret, started with the Hypochondriac for the church yard. They had not gone far, before they were met by one of the towns people, who having been properly drilled by the famous Stevenson, called out, "Ah, Doctor! what poor soul have you there?"

"Poor Mr. B——," sighed the Doctor—"left us last night."

"Great pity he had not left us 20 years ago," replied the other, "for he was a bad man."

Presently another of the townsmen met them with the same question—"And what poor soul have you got there, Doctor?"

"Poor Mr. B——," answered the Doctor again, "is dead."

"Ah indeed!" said the other, "and the Devil has got his own at last."

"Oh villain!" exclaimed the man in the coffin, "If I was not dead, how I would pay you for this."

Soon after this, while the pall bearers were resting themselves near the churchyard, another one stepped up with the old question again. "What poor soul have you got there, Doctor?" "Poor Mr. B——," he replied "is gone."

Yes, and to h—l, said the other; for he is not gone there, I see not what use there is for such a place"—Here the dead man bursting off the lid of the coffin which had been purposely left loose, leaping out exclaiming, "Oh, you villain, I am gone to h—l, am I?—Well, I have come back to pay such an ungrateful rascal as you are." A race was immediately commenced between the dead man and the living; to the petrifying consternation of a great many of the spectators, at sight of a corpse bursting from the coffin, and in all horrors of the winding sheet, racing through the streets. After having exercised himself into a very copious perspiration by his fantastic chase, the Hypochondriac was brought home to Dr. Stevenson, freed of all his complaints. And by strengthening food, and generous wine, cheerful company, and moderate exercise, was soon restored to perfect health.

PITTSBURGH.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1817.

In New-Orleans a malignant disease, no doubt the yellow fever, continues to prove extremely destructive to the lives of people, particularly to boatmen and other strangers; 15 or 20 are stated to be taken off in a day; several of the passengers in the steam boat Washington, arrived at Shippingport, died on the passage up the river, and one since.

Important.---We have seen a letter from a gentleman at Gibraltar, dated June 21, stating, that he had conversed with an officer belonging to the United States' ship Peacock, just arrived at that place from Algiers and Tunis. From the latter place they had brought our consul, Mr. Anderson who was induced to leave there, owing to his having been treated in a manner that would not justify his remaining longer as the representative of the United States. The Dey, for some time previous to his departure, would not permit him to come into his presence, in consequence of his refusing to kiss his highness' hand.—He has also detained there an American citizen for demanding payment for property sold his highness to the amount of several thousand dollars. The Peacock left them getting their fortifications in order and it is the general opinion that there will be a brush with them, soon after her joining the squadron at Marseilles. She will sail as soon as she can get in a supply of provisions and water.

N. Y. Gazette.

The Dutch, at Java, complain of the vexatious procrastination and the unaccommodating conduct of the British functionaries commissioned to effect the transfer of the island & its dependencies to the king of the Netherlands.

An attempt has been made to establish the feudal system at Java, by compelling the people to work in the roads and in cleaning out the drains, which led to an insurrection, followed by much bloodshed.—The whole eastern division of the Dutch army marched against the disaffected, and after a little resistance 100 were killed, and 500 taken, which latter were marched to prison, and being much limited in their confinement, they removed the tiles, and being resisted, they rose upon the guard, defenceless as they were, and about 200 of them were immediately killed.

A ship under English colors, bound to Mecca with pilgrims, has been taken by the pirates, and all on board murdered except three of her crew, who made their escape

The following collection of a few of the many curious punishments, inflicted for various offences, is copied from the old records of Massachusetts, between the years 1630 and 1658.

"Sir Richard Saltonstal, fined four bushels of malt for his absence from the court."

"Josias Plastow shall for stealing 4 baskets of corn from the Indians, return eight baskets again, be fined 5*l.* and hereafter to be called Josias, and not Mr. as he used to be."

"Joyce Bradwick shall give unto Alexander Beeks, 20 shillings for promising marriage with her friends consent and after refusing to perform the same.

"Thomas Peter, for suspicion of slander, idleness and stubbornness, is ao be severely whipt and kept in hold.

"Richard Turner, for being notoriously drunk was fined 2*l.*

"Edward Palmer, for his extortion, taking 33s. 7d. for the plank and work of the ston stocks, is fined 5*l.* and sentenced to be set an hour in the stocks.

"John White is bound in 10*l.* to be of good behaviour and not to come into the company of his neighbour Thomas Bull's wife alone.

"MORE MUD," was an expression, which it is said the famous Mat. Lyon used, whenever he saw an ill-looking new member come to Congress. In one of the western States (says the N. C. Observer) lives Dirt, esq. is announced as a candidate for Congress. Mat's apostrophe in this case would not be very much out of the way.

THE GREAT SNAKE.

Is not taken. We have heard a conjecture (says the True American) that it is no other than the Old Serpent, who, getting a little out of his latitude, merely showed himself to the Blue Lights, on his way to Pennsylvania, to aid Binns and Findlay in the election. We suspect he is already on the coast.

On Monday the 28th of July the Seventy-fourth Annual Conference of the people called Methodists, commenced at Sheffield, Eng.---The Rev. John Gaulter was chosen President, and the Rev. Jabez Bunting Secretary. About three hundred preachers assembled. The last week was occupied by the Committee for Stations, and by the Committee for Examination and Finances of the numerous Missions of the Connexion. Various interesting accounts have recently been received from St. Domingo and Ceylon, and notwithstanding the great pressure of the times, upwards of seventeen thousand pounds have been raised by this religious body, in the course of the last year, for the support of missions among the Heathen.

In a late Dublin Evening Post, a Mr. Edward Ball advertises, that he "will exhibit after six day's notice, for the sum of 300,000*l.* that long wished for Perpetual Motion, now going in its rapid velocity, without the aid or assistance of man or beast, springs, weights or balances, steam, wind, or water, or any other visible assistance, and will continue, in its rapid velocity, as long as a body of any substance last." This art, he observes, had hitherto defeated every attempt, but he achieved it at the first trial, with a few minutes study, and three hours labour.

From the Salem Register, Sept. 10.

The Sea Serpent—again—The Serpent has again visited us. On Sunday evening, his levee was attended by a large number of citizens. A small boat fishing on Sunday night was very much troubled. The crew state, that he was some hours about them, and that a number of times he was within ten feet of them. It seems that there were swarms or schools of bait around him, and it appears evident that he follows them.

FROM THE CHARLESTON COURIER

The following is the copy of a letter from Gen. Washington to Dr. Cochran, Director General of the Military Hospitals during our Revolutionary War. It was obtained from the son of Dr. Cochran, and its authenticity can be vouched for. It will serve to remove the reproach that has been sometimes cast upon the General of his possessing a cold and unsocial temper. The style of the letter is playful and lively, and exhibits great goodness & sincerity of disposition.

West Point, Aug. 16, 1779.

Dear Doctor.—I have asked Mrs. Cochran and Mrs Livingston to dine with me to morrow; but ought I not to apprize them of their fare? As I hate deception even where the imagination only is concerned, I will.

It is needless to promise that my table is large enough to hold the ladies—of this they had ocular proof yesterday. To say how it is usually covered, is rather more essential, and this shall be the purport of my letter.

Since my arrival at this happy spot, we have had a ham, sometimes a shoulder of bacon, to grace the head of the table—a piece of roast beef adorns the foot, and a small dish of greens or beans (almost imperceptible) decorates the centre. When the cook has a mind to cut a figure (& this, I presume, he will attempt to do to-morrow) we have two beef steak pies or dishes of crabs in addition, one on each side of the centre dish, dividing the space, and reducing the distance between dish and dish to about 6 feet, which, without them would be nearly twelve apart. Of late he has had the surprising luck to discover that apples will make pies; and it is a question if, amidst the violence of his efforts we do not get one of apples instead of having both of beef.

If the ladies can put up with such entertainment; submit to partake of it on plates once tin, but now iron, (not become so by the labor of scouring) I shall be happy to see them.

I am, dear sir, your most obedient servant,

GEO. WASHINGTON.

To Dr. John Cochran.

Mr. Sadler, the younger, ascended in a baloon from the Cavalry barrack, near Dublin, on the 22d of July, at forty minutes past one P. M. having crossed the Irish Channel in five hours and twenty minutes.

A Paris paper states, that in the latter part of June, six wolves invaded the commune of Lescure, in the department of L'Arriege, where they attacked several of the inhabitants, of whom seven were wounded, and two mortally. Four children have also been devoured by the wolves in the deparment of l'Yonne.

Thirty workmen, on the 25th of July, commenced digging a place (on the South Denes, at Yarmouth) 50 feet square, & 16 deep, to place the foundation of a column to be raised to the memory of Lord Nelson.

A German female dwarf, seven and a half years old, and only one foot and eight inches high, has been recently exhibited on the frontiers of France. It is said that she sings and dances well, and answers most intelligently all questions put to her.
